A deck you designed end to end, not a template you filled. Show us the densest technical slide in it.

A technical illustration you built from an engineer's rough sketch, a CAD screenshot, or a photograph: a process flow diagram, a system schematic, or an equipment cutaway.

Charts you built yourself from raw data, with a note on where the data came from.

A one-pager or spec sheet where real technical content, including a table, had to fit a fixed page.

A website you designed and shipped, with a live link.

A brand or template system you maintained that other people used correctly without you in the room.
